COURSE OBJECTIVES

The aim of this course is to give students experience with methods and theories in the anthropology of health. Following an inquiry based learning format, the course will consist of a series of components that will require the students to work collaboratively and individually. In addition, the students will learn how to work in a variety of academically relevant media including oral presentations, poster presentations, and term papers. Ideally, at the conclusion of the course students will have a better understanding of how anthropologists of health conduct and present their research, and will have acquired experience at working both on their own and in groups.

COURSE CONTENT

This course explores health from a broad anthropological perspective. The course consists of 4 components, each dealing with a specific topic related to the general theme of the anthropology of health. In the first component, students will uncover the predominant metaphors of health in Canadian society drawing from observations of popular advertisements. The first component will also expose students to the variety of different models for health that are found both cross-culturally and within Canadian society. In the second component, students will learn how to critically assess medical literature in terms of disease etiology, and use this knowledge to prepare a policy brief on public health interventions. The third component of the course will involve an observational study of cyborgs, a concept that anthropologists have developed to account for the increasing use of technology to enhance human biology. In the fourth component of the course, students will undertake a study of the social history of a particular medicine or drug, where they will try and uncover the underlying conflicts and controversy that characterize drug development and marketing in North America. Students will have class room time to explore essential themes and to prepare their written assignments for each component.
