COURSE DESCRIPTION:

This senior seminar course will explore the many dimensions in the production, exchange and consumption of food across time, space and cultural frames. Students are required to actively engage in class discussions, read all assigned materials and other relevant references with a critical view, and do class presentations. Students are expected to have strong skills in library research, writing and oral presentation. A reading list will be posted before the beginning of the semester. There are no required exams in this course. Students' performance will be based on class presentations and written assignments.
