Syllabus - RELS 201 L04 Winter 2013
World Religions, Western
An introduction to Judaism, Christianity and Islam

Time and place: any time, any where -- an online course. All supplied information, discussion groups, and assessment modules are accessed through the Blackboard course management system.

Instructor: Prof. L. Eslinger; email: eslinger@ucalgary.ca; phone: 403-220-3281; office: SS1334; online office hour: T 12:30-13:30; also accessible online during regular work hours in the discussion forum and by email.

Course description:

RELS 201 is an introduction to three western world religions: Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. The course is comprised of five sections: one introducing the critical perspective in the study of religion; one introducing the historical and cultural matrix of the three western world religions; and one each for Judaism, Christianity, and Islam.

The primary objective of the course is for students to develop an understanding of the nature of religion, generally, and as exemplified by the Abrahamic religions (Judaism, Christianity, and Islam) in particular. After completion of this course students should be able to:

1. describe with appropriate authority the beliefs and behaviours of Jews, Christians, and Muslims
2. describe with appropriate authority the nature of religion and why practitioners regard it as essential to human well-being
3. analyze the underlying motives and values of any religious tradition
4. characterize the similarities and differences among the Abrahamic religions
5. describe the utility of an objective, academic study of religion

Progress through the course unfolds along the timeline established in a normal 13-week lecture-based course.

1. Each week begins with orienting outline (posted as a lecture outline or notes upon a prescribed reading).
2. Then, adopting the perspective of this introductory posted material, students read prescribed sections from the textbook or an alternate reading posted on Blackboard. Students crystallize their understanding by developing their own notes to synthesize the mini-lecture perspective and readings.
3. In the final phase of each week students begin to build and extend their thinking by independent, ethnographic-styled study of Internet manifestations of the religious traditions. These observations along with understandings developed from introductory lectures and assigned readings provide a basis for participation in online discussions. Students bring their understandings and questions to the online discussion of orienting questions (provided by the instructor) and student responses. The discussion forum provides opportunity to extend, refine, and cement individual learning.

Textbooks and other required readings

1. Jakobsh, Doris R. (ed.). 2013. World Religions: Canadian Perspectives -- Western Traditions. Toronto, ON: Nelson Education (purchase from the UC Bookstore; publisher's description: http://hed.nelson.com/nelsonhed/student.do?topicid=5D1E&sortBy=copy&type=all\_radio&courseid=RL01&product\_isbn=9780176501181&disciplinenummer=27&stuurl=http%3A%2F%2Fwww.worldreligions.nelson.com%2F9780176501181%2Fstudent).
2. Online versions of orienting notes and other supplementary readings will be accessible in the content modules (I-IV) of the Rels 201 Blackboard course page.

Student activities

1. Read and reflect on the weekly mini-lecture. Apply the perspective to your own reflection on Judaism, Christianity, and Islam.
2. Read and reflect on the assigned weekly readings
3. Participate in weekly online discussion groups

Discussion with other students and the instructor is an important part of online learning. Each week the instructor will initiate an online discussion session by posting a few points or questions arising from the week's mini-lecture or textbook and other posted readings.

Graded Activities

Take note, now, of submission and test deadlines indicated in the course outline. Indicated graded activities are your only opportunity to earn credits toward your final grade. Students who have a valid (documented) excuse for missing a deadline should contact the instructor by the deadline date to inquire about remedies. Results of graded activities will be posted to the Blackboard grade book (accessed from the "My Grades" link in the Blackboard navigation panel). Grades for each activity will normally be posted within one week after any graded activity.

Grading scale: A+ ≥ 96; A ≥ 90; A- ≥ 85; B+ ≥ 80; B ≥ 75; B- ≥ 70; C+ ≥ 65; C ≥ 60; C- ≥ 55; D+ ≥ 50; D ≥ 45; F ≤ 44.

Assessment points

1. (5%) completion of three "Orientation" (week 1) assignments (must be completed by 16:30, 11 Jan)
2. (70%) five online unit exams:
  1. 01 Feb: critical perspectives unit test
  2. 15 Feb: ancient legacy unit test
  3. 08 Mar: Judaism unit test
  4. 22 Mar: Christianity unit test
  5. 05 Apr: Islam unit test
3. (25%) participation in on-line discussion groups

**There will be no Registrar scheduled final exam for this course.*
