Required Text(s): Daniel L. Pals, Introducing Religion: Readings from the Classic Theorists (New York: Oxford University Press, 2009).

Optional Text(s): John Hick, The Fifth Dimension: An Exploration of the Spiritual Realm, (London: Oneworld Publications, 2004).

James C. Livingston, Anatomy of the Sacred: An Introduction to Religion, (Upper Saddle River: Prentice Hall, 2001).

Michael Peterson et al, Reason and Religious Belief: An Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion, (New York: Oxford University Press, 2003).

Course Description: This course will introduce the student to the study of religious experiences, which include ideas taken from philosophy, rituals, altered states of consciousness, mysticism, and belief in religious/supernatural encounters with the divine. This broad selection of material will provide insight and understanding into the power, complexity, function, and relevancy of religious experience. In addition to this, the grounds for belief, both subjective and objective, will be examined. From mystical deliberations, to the wide spectrum of religious experience within a socio-cultural context, this course will identify the nature and function of religion as a vehicle for human expression, comfort, and contact with someone/something greater outside of the physical world. Finally, an analysis of what theologian John Hick identifies as The Fifth Dimension will be utilized to provide a broad spectrum of approaches by which to understand the phenomenon of religious experience.

Online elements for this course: Course notes

Course notes as posted on D2L. NOTE: The John Hick material will be in the form of course notes for salient points.

Core Competencies: Students will work on the following skills: critical appraisal of arguments and theories, application of theories and concepts presented in course readings and lectures, library research, essay organization and writing skills. The essay assignment will require students to select an explanation of a religious experience described within the textbook and critically apply one of the theories explored in the course. All essay topics must first be approved by the professor.
