Course Description:

This course focuses on the transformation of a group of followers of a Jewish teacher to a religious community within the diversity of the Roman Empire. In other words, it is concerned with the conversion of a Second Temple Jewish sect to a separate religion. It will examine how a historical figure, Jesus of Nazareth, was transformed into a mythological/theological figure of Christ.

Outcomes:

This course is designed to familiarize students with the assumptions and methods used in the study of Christian origins. This familiarization process will take the form of lectures, readings, and exercises that have been structured to present the basic information and to demonstrate the interdisciplinary nature of scholarship in this area. There will be a specific focus on the use of the social sciences in the reconstruction of Christian Origins.

The requirements of the course are also structured to acquaint students with the primary sources including the New Testament and its companion literature from Second Temple or Formative Judaism.

The requirements are also designed to develop skills necessary for the construction of research papers and the critical examination of secondary sources; in other words, the type of analytical and critical techniques that would be required for any detailed examination in any discipline.

Self-Directed Study

Students are expected to develop skills of time management, organization and independent learning through assigned readings, preparation for exams and in developing a research essay.
