- Understand the core theories of international trade, including Ricardian models of trade, specific-factor models, the Heckscher-Ohlin model, and models of trade with heterogeneous firms;
- Apply their institutional and theoretical knowledge of trade to evaluating current policy questions of the day, such as the China-US trade dispute, new deals such as CETA or USMCA, or ongoing multilateral negotiations and disputes through the WTO; and,
- Complete assignments that require short- and long-answer written answers, to demonstrate institutional knowledge of the global trading system, and assignments that require demonstrable ability to apply trade theory to novel trade policy questions.
