ADMINISTRATIVE EXPERIENCE

ADMINISTRATIVE POSITIONS:

Interim Director, Office of Diversity, Equity, and Protected Disclosure: February 1, 2014 to August 31, 2014

As Interim Director, I established the office and implemented its mandate. Duties included recruitment of the Director and the Office Administrator; developing terms of reference for and chairing the ODEPD Advisory Committee; developing terms of reference for and chairing the Diversity and Equity Network; providing educational workshops on Equity and Diversity; identifying and analysing systemic issues; and raising policy and other issues for consideration at appropriate committees.

Advisor to the President on Women's Issues: January 1, 2011 to December 31, 2013

As Advisor and Chair of the President's Advisory Committee on the Status of Women, I wrote three reports: Removing Barriers: A University of Calgary Office of Equity, Diversity, and Human Rights (a report based on a survey of equity and diversity offices in the U15); Faculty Retention and Gender (a report analysing the relationship between gender and departures from 2005-2012); and Mentorship, Service, and the Culture of Leadership (a report recommending that priorities of the Academic Plan require implementation of formal mentoring programs and a reassessment of key service issues). The Removing Barriers report led to the creation of the Office of Diversity, Equity, and Protected Disclosure. In addition, as a result of a confidential review that I did of the Women's Resource Centre between May 2011 and December 2013, the Women's Resource Centre reported to the Advisor.

Other terms of reference included participating in the development of employment equity policies and procedures; facilitating communication among university groups; taking steps to encourage research that bears on the status of women at the university; organizing special events; and acting as liaison with officers at other universities and organizations to monitor pertinent developments outside the University of Calgary.

Highlights here included the reestablishment of the Academic Women's Association; the creation of the Women's Issues Network, the UCWN Newsletter, and the research series, Eyes High on Research (2012-2013). Other events included The Future of Women's Studies in Alberta Symposium (September 28-29, 2012), The Top Seven Reasons Why Smart Women Should Speak Up (workshop and keynote by Shari Graydon, Informed Opinions, January 7, 2013), JoAnn Moody visit, September 9-10, 2013; Women in Front (March 7, 2013), Work, Life, and Mentoring: Who Has the Time? (October 20, 2013), and Eyes High on Diversity (October 28, 2013). Many of these events were collaborative efforts, for example, with Women's Studies, the Women's Resource Centre, the Institute of Gender Research, and the Werklund Foundation for Youth Leadership.

Associate Dean, Faculty of Graduate Studies: January 1, 2005 to December 31, 2009

As one of four Associate Deans, I worked collaboratively with Graduate Studies staff and the Dean to facilitate and improve the education of graduate students. My portfolio, the largest of any of the Associate Deans, included addressing the concerns of students in 25 graduate programs across a range of faculties (Education, Fine Arts, Humanities, Social Sciences, and Social Work). (Until Jan. 2009, I also handled Faculty of Science, Kinesiology, and Haskayne School of Business). Administering and interpreting Faculty of Graduate Studies regulations for close to 2000 students, I resolved conflicts between students and supervisors, advised the graduate coordinators on difficult student issues and interpretation of Faculty of Graduate Studies regulations, participated in the running of the Interdisciplinary Graduate Program, assessed examination failures, monitored student progress, and investigated issues of academic and non-academic misconduct. In addition, I negotiated devolution agreements with the Faculty of Social Work, the Graduate Division of Educational Research, and the Haskayne School of Business.

Major committee responsibilities included chairing the Faculty of Graduate Studies Policy Committee, and the Collective Agreement Negotiating Committee for Teaching Assistants. As Chair of the Collective Agreement, I negotiated three agreements, the last a three-year agreement (2008-2011) that achieved a paid maternity leave for teaching assistants and introduced a process for the monitoring of Assignment of Duties with the goal of improving compliance with the agreement. As Chair of the Policy Committee, I led a major review of all Graduate Studies regulations, including substantial revisions of the doctoral and two master's handbooks, the adoption of a Policy Governing the Relationship between Supervisor and Student, and a Faculty of Graduate Studies Intellectual Property Awareness Checklist.

Head, Department of English: July 1, 1994 to June 30, 1998

In my final year as Head, English had 46 faculty (professors, instructors, sessionals), more than 300 Majors, 30 Honours students, and 50 graduate students. As Head of the largest department in the faculty and one of the largest at the university, I led a complex organization through a period of significant transformation and challenges. Through a commitment to consultative and transparent governance, I addressed a serious morale crisis occasioned by both budget cuts and numerous retirements. Despite budget cuts of over 20%, the department revived a dormant extra-to-load scheme, reclassified support staff, and nationally advertised several positions.

In order to improve the effectiveness of my administrative team, I revised the job description for the Associate Head (Undergraduate), increased the course release granted the Associate Head

(Graduate), and appointed an Honours Advisor. Regularly meeting with sessionals and other faculty to discuss their concerns, I devised a clearer system to rank applications, and then guided the department through the conversion of 8 sessional positions to 7.5 instructor positions.

In response to ongoing budget cuts, I initiated a Curriculum Delivery Task Force to help the department more logically plan the delivery of its courses and program, and encouraged the department to experiment with graders and employ more Graduate Teaching Fellows. I implemented the ACCESS funded U of C/Red Deer College collaborative degree, and persuaded the department to endorse a program that enabled us to obtain more positions and computer equipment. None of these accomplishments was done in isolation; they required the help of a great many people, and part of my leadership was ensuring that people within the department knew that they were valued contributors and people outside the department heard about those contributions.

As Head, I served on numerous faculty, university, and national committees, including Dean's Advisory, Faculty Promotions Committee, Markin-Flanagan Distinguished Writers Programme, Paget-Hoy Speakers Series, and CACE (Canadian Association of Chairs of English). As an executive member of CACE, I initiated national surveys of hiring patterns, and created a stronger presence for the association by collaborating with ACCUTE.

Associate Dean (Student Affairs), Faculty of Humanities: July 1, 1993 to June 30, 1994

I served as chief advisor to over 700 Humanities Majors and Honours students, and any other students enrolled in Humanities courses. Working with the team of advisors for several faculties, I gained valuable experience in understanding the operations of the university from both an administrator's perspective and from a student's. The position enabled me to serve as an ambassador for the faculty by publicizing our programs both internally and externally, and advising students on the choosing and structuring of their programs. Seeing my role as an advocate for students as well as a faculty enforcer of regulations, I helped students negotiate the vast array of university regulations; for example, rules regarding academic misconduct, satisfactory academic standing, deferred term work and exams, and letters of permission.

In addition to student advising, I had major responsibilities regarding both curriculum and other student-related administrative matters. As a member of CAT (Committee on Admission and Transferability), I worked on improving transferability, and as faculty contact for a new program to assist disabled students, I ensured that departments understood the new process. Serving as Chair of CARC (the Faculty Curriculum Committee), I facilitated department course and program changes, for example, helping to guide the BCOMM/BA (HUM) through to approval. As a member of Dean's Advisory and Faculty Executive, and in constant communication with the departmental advisors in each of the six Humanities departments, I effectively contributed as a team member, both initiating action—receiving funding for COLT (Comparative Literature) courses to be offered in Special Sessions for the first time and implementing a successful review of time limits for Honours that discriminated against part-time students—and advising my colleagues on how best to achieve their own goals. Helping to improve the quality of students' academic experience at the University of Calgary was my own goal in this position. In the short time I was in this position, I did much to accomplish that goal.

Administrative Officer, Department of English: July 1, 1989 to June 30, 1992

In 1989, the department had 56 faculty (37 professors and 19 sessionals). In January 1992, in recognition of the numerous demands of the position of Administrative Officer, the job was retitled Associate Head. Among my many tasks were being chief undergraduate advisor to over 300 English Majors, and doing course assignment and timetabling for faculty and GATs. In addition to chairing the Undergraduate Programme Committee, selecting undergraduate awards, admitting and approving for graduation Honours students, and serving on numerous departmental and faculty committees, I frequently was Acting Head. Functioning as a liaison between the department and other parts of the university, I also served as a liaison between the Head and the department.
